Artemis Kourosh

ESTATE PLANNING, PROBATE LAW AND BUSINESS LAW

Artemis Kourosh knows that a well-thought-out estate plan can be the difference between worry and peace. Because of this, she founded a law practice to help her clients take important steps to safeguard their future. From creating an estate plan, to assisting with probate matters and business law, she is in her clients' corner to give them peace of mind.

Kourosh grew up in Texas, graduated from the University of Texas at Austin with special honors in communications and received her Jurist Doctorate from SMU Deadman School of Law. Following law school, she was a lecturer at premier law and business schools abroad before returning to Dallas-Fort Worth to serve her community as an estate planning attorney.

For Kourosh, her work is personal. "I remember very clearly that my parents went to an estate planning attorney when I was a child so that if something did happen to them, I would have guardians in place," she says. "That changed my life because it brought me some sense of tranquility. Today, it is important to me to bring that same tranquility to my clients. Whatever happens, there will be a plan in place. We can't predict the rollercoaster of life, but one thing we can do is prepare and plan for the future they want for their family."

In her collaborative approach, she spends time with her clients, communicates with them to understand their needs, and guides them through the estate planning process step by step. "My clients deserve peace of mind," she says, "This is my goal. When they leave my office, they don't feel alone in this, but have a sense of relief because there is a solid plan in place for them."
